STUDENT SUSPENSIONS

Clampdown after the disorder in Holyland in recent weeks

A NUMBER of students have been suspended from Queen's Ulster Universities following disorder in the Holyland area in recent days.

27 Queen's students have been suspended following alleged breaches, while 10 Ulster students from University have also been suspended.

A Queen's spokesperson said the university "investigates every complaint it receives and applies disciplinary measures as appropriate in accordance with our student code of conduct regulations".

addition, if the University receives notification of a Covid breach from the PSNI, students will be suspended with immediate effect for 14 days. Ulster University have introduced a similar policy. A number of these suspensions have been issued over recent days.

"Queen's University and Ulster University work in partnership with Belfast City Council and the PSNI as well other colleges and statutory agencies to tackle incidents of anti-social behaviour or breaches of public health guidelines.

A spokesperson for Ulster University said ten students have received precautionary suspensions, with a further three cases pending since a new disciplinary policy was introduced on Monday.

A spokesperson said: "Ulster University has issued precautionary suspension letters to ten students with a further three cases pending since the implementation of the University's disciplinary policy for Covid related referrals on September 21st.' Continued on page 2
