Belfast-Dublin: New train era

Hourly Enterprise service between cities gets under way as Grand Central Station cranks up another gear

BY JOE MCCANN

TRANSLINK say the start of an hourly Belfast-Dublin train service from the new Grand Central Station is “a massive boost” to the city. The public transport company’s Chief Executive Chris Conway said the turbocharged Enterprise offering was great news for “people, communities, and the environment and represents a tremendous opportunity for economic growth.”

Fifteen services will operate in each direction from Monday to Saturday, more than doubling the previous number of eight. Eight services will operate on Sundays, up from the previous six.
